Samuel Sours, 78 years old and the ast but one of the Mexican soldiers from Page still living, died at his home at Stony Man a few days eince. claimed to have been the first to scale the walls of Chapultepec, and no doubt was a good soldier. He was known as "Old Chapult" by his many friends, and was fond of his youthful record in of the congregation below caused a thrilling scene in St. Patrick's Catheiog children's mass. The big edifice, which stands at Washington street and Central avenue, was crowded to the doors. All the seats on the main flor were occupied by children, while the adults sat in two small galleries in the rear, on the north and south sides of the choir loft. These balconies are over 20 feet above the main floor.

While Father McCarthy was intoning the most impressive part of the mass there was a sudden commotion in the north gallery and a loud voice which thrilled the whole congregation, shrick-

"Let me go, let me jump; it is the will of God!"

The priest, in astonishment, paused in his solemn office and raised his hand as if to give some word of warning or command, but his voice was drowned in a sudden shout of alarm which burst in a sudden shout of alarm which burst simultaneously from the lips of all.

A middle-aged man of powerful frame had risen quietly from his seat near the front of the gallery and leaped to the railing in the attempt to fing himself over headlong. Before he could do so a man sitting close by seized him by the leg and another by the coat, and attempted to drag him back. It was then the maniac uttered the crywhich exartled the congregation.

one of the men who held him and was about to fling the other back on the seats, three other men grasped him and overpowered him. Struggling fiercely he was forced out through a door and dragged downstairs, where his captors succeeded in calming him down. Then they led him home were he broke down and sobbed. They refuse to give his name and address.
